

6 November 2017

Dear Faculty of Philosophy,

I am writing with my evaluation of the Proceedings of the SinFonIJA conference held in Niš in 2013, edited by Branimir Stankovic and Aleksandra Janic. The volume contains eleven cutting-edge theoretical papers in linguistics, with important theoretical and empirical contributions to the fields of syntax, semantics, morphology, and phonology, across languages as broad as South Slavic, Turkish, Hungarian, and African-American English. The proceedings are a valuable resource for scholars in all of these areas, and bring together both recent doctoral recipients alongside established researchers. The work treats current issues in linguistic theory such as the left periphery, multiple wh- movement, the DP/NP debate, scalar implicatures, aspectual interpretation, and morphological markedness. It will bring continued prestige and esteem to the strong linguistics department at Niš (where I myself came to study linguistics some sixteen years ago!) and provide important continuity in the tradition of SinFonIJA, a conference with great importance for the region and language family overall. I therefore evaluate the volume as of the highest priority for publication, and very much look forward to seeing it in press. I am most happy for follow-up should you have any further questions, and send collegial regards and wishes for your continued productivity and success as a faculty.

Best regards,

Andrew Nevins
Professor of Linguistics
University College London
a.nevins@ucl.ac.uk